18. Kristallnacht: A Historical Perspective

Tonight is the night after the 16th of MarCheshvan. Forty-eight years ago, on November 9, 1938, the so-called "Kristallnacht" occurred: the beginning of a historical tragedy with a fatal ending.

This was a bloody drama indeed. The prelude to this chain of events, though, is not known to most people.

One Friday morning early in November, 1938, all Polish Jews residing in Germany were suddenly arrested and herded onto trains heading toward Poland. All trains stopped at the border town of Spongene (which I remember well from my own travels between Germany and Poland). All day long on the fateful Friday Jews of all ages were arrested for no reason — and heralded over to this Polish border town where, minus their belongings, all 12,000 of them were unceremoniously dumped. Some women had taken along Shabbos candles to light in the train, and the Jewish natives of Poland did their best to welcome these sudden immigrants. However, as you can imagine, these displaced refugees went through much pain and agony.
Among the refugees dropped off at Spongene were the parents of a certain Herschel Greenspan, a Jewish student who was studying in Paris. When he heard of his parents' fate, he became so outraged that he decided to take revenge on the German people. This was ridiculous, of course, but understandable. In his desperation he bought a pistol with the intention of shooting the German ambassador in Paris. Approaching the secretariat, he announced that he had an urgent message to deliver to the ambassador. The secretary, a man named Vonrat, refused him admission and, in the course of heated argument Greenspan shot Vonrat and wounded him mortally. This confrontation occurred on November 7, 1938.

"The Jews have taken revenge!!" This outcry spread rapidly throughout Germany. Two days later on November 9, the Nazis orchestrated a widespread attack on the Jews of Germany and axis- controlled Austria. This sudden burst of barbarianism was explained by the Nazis to the general public as "a spontaneous demonstration of righteous indignation by the German people against the Jews for the cowardly act of treachery" (the murder of Vonrat). All in all, as a result of this so called "spontaneous reaction," 191 synagogues were set ablaze and another 76 were totally demolished, let alone the thousands of Jewish stores which were ravaged. Thus, the name "Kristallnacht" — the night of the broken glass, the shattered windows of Jewish establishments. That same day at least 30,000 Jewish men were arrested and sent to concentration camps. Others were killed or beaten. Of course, a pompous funeral was held for secretary Vonrat. To top it off, a collective penalty of one billion marks was levied against the Jews of Germany.

In reality, none of this was spontaneous. This offensive had been meticulously planned down to the first detail, in typical German fashion. The murder of Vonrat merely served as a catalyst to bring it all about sooner. Kristallnacht was a turning point for the Jews of Germany and Austria. From this point on there was no further place for them in the German economy, and their own cultural life was brought to an abrupt halt. It was the beginning of the end. From the Kristallnacht leads a straight path to Auschwitz, Treblinka, Theresienstadt — to the murder of 6 million Kedoshim, 1/3 of our people. Amongst us there are still many who remember these events personally.

But there is much more to this story. By strange “coincidence” (nothing in life is a coincidence!), that same date, November 9, marks a celebration. Seventy-nine years earlier, in 1859, the whole German nation celebrated the Centennial of the birth of the famous German poet, Friedrich Phillip Von Schiller. Schiller was a great humanist, and no German could go through school without mastering Schiller’s plays and poetry. He had become, in effect, a national hero. All over Germany there was a jubilant celebration of his 100th birthday.

Also participating in this commemoration was the newly founded yeshiva in Frankfurt-am-Main, the Yeshiva founded by Rabbiner Samson Raphael Hirsch (of which our Yeshiva is a continuation). A detailed account of the school’s celebration can be found in the “Gesammelte Schriften”, Vol. IV. Briefly, the higher grades had assembled, together with the faculty, administration, the Board of the Kehillo and the general public. The rooms were festively decorated. Addressing the crowd was none less than the great Rav Hirsch himself. He proceeded to deliver a masterful oration on the topic of the pronounces over meeting one of the נבカメラת אומת החולות ק윈מי שטרמי נבקרה

If Schiller were to come to us, said Rav Hirsch, we’d be required by our מים לטרמי נבקרה to pronounce this נב注明来源 (the entire speech has been recorded under the title of the “Schiller-redor”). Extensively quoting from Schiller’s poetry, Rav Hirsch illustrated how this sublime individual stood for all we call virtuous: lofty ideas about the Almighty, righteousness, goodness, justice, honesty, beauty, free will, man above beast, family life, the dignity of women, virtue and truth, etc. All great ideas expressed, even by non-Jewish sources, originate in the Torah. Because of such people, continued Rav Hirsch, the Jews of 1859 were experiencing a renaissance. Righteousness is spreading, the ghetto barriers are being broken down, the Jewish people are finally becoming welcome members in the civilization of mankind.*

This tremendous speech was delivered amidst festivities on November 9, 1859. The optimism he expressed was showed by almost all his contemporaries. That beautiful dream — that the Jews were finally accepted as equals — lasted for about 100 years until, suddenly, they were shaken out of this slumber.

Even during the early 1930's when Hitler began organizing the storm troopers, people refused to accept reality until they were rudely awakened by the shattering of glass at the Kristallnacht. The bubble had burst. Since the Middle Ages the Jews had thirsted for freedom. Just as they seemingly had reached that plateau — they enjoyed more human rights during the mid-19th century than ever before — along come the stormtroopers.

Let us keep in mind that they too were educated in German schools where Schiller and others like him were an important part of the curriculum. Despite this humanistic education, these SS men became more cruel than beasts of prey. They were the sadistic murderers and torturers of innocent men, women and children. So the dreaming Jewish soul awoke — was awakened — from a beautiful vision, more hungry for life and light and freedom than ever before.

Let us admit it. Our grandparents subscribed to an illusion — an imaginary faith in the civilizing result of a liberal education encompassing art, poetry, music, and theater. It was thought that man's inhumanity to man was a matter of the deep, dark past. Some still did not awaken from this vision until the smoke began to rise from the burning shuls and כפרים, and until this illusory silence was broken by the shattering of windows and the screaming of frightened children in the night*.

Let us close this dark chapter with a firm belief in the הקב"ה, the One who will not desert us or forsake us: "אלא תזוננה ולא תשתunei" The age of Humanism was a passing episode in the annals of history. The sentiment was only skin deep- and short lived. When the fires of the Holocaust began burning, we suddenly were haunted by the words we say in our daily מז"כ of נאלה, as well as in ימי כפור of נאלה הפיליה, as well as in our daily מז"כ, as well as in ימי כפור of נאלה הפיליה, as well as in ימי כפור of נאלה הפיליה:

The great men, the great figures and heroes כאל כל הנבונים are like nothing before you. насел השם are as if they never existed. כל אלי they have no knowledge. הנבונים are as if they have no knowledge. כלל מודיע Men of understanding without intelligence ככלל השכל Most of their actions, are empty ירמי תיימםϋבל לפני כולם and so are their lives empty. וῃה האדם מן הבמה The supremacy of man over the animals proves to be hollow. אין Man is merely an intelligent animal.

This הפיליה aptly describes the painful lesson we have learned.

We subscribe to the visionary concept ofmorah טררא ז"ל דרר. But we are reminded of the saying of our מדרש התלמוד in the רה"ג on הקדשה:

* Most members of our Kehilla know of a miraculous incident which occurred to our late Rav ל"ח the day after Kristallnacht. Rav Breuer was arrested and detained along with the other Jewish men. At the lineup, the Nazi officer told him to go home, as he was over 60 years old and not subject to arrest. In his extreme honesty, Rav Breuer protested that he was only 57. The Nazi screamed back, "Don't contradict me! You are over 60 and out you go — or else!" If not for this，则, would our Kehillo be here today? Who knows....
Should someone tell you of knowledge, of science, of wisdom among the nations — believe him. But if he tells you of wisdom among them — don’t believe him.

True — there is science, technology, law, medicine, political science, history, languages, psychology et al. Our tradition of Torah is emer Aryan, that is, "The Most Holy" has given his wisdom to flesh and blood. Therefore, we make a beracha when we see great scientist — we respect the accomplishments of science and most areas of human knowledge.

Most areas, that is. We do not extend it to include philosophy, ethics, morality and humanism. The teaching of what is right and wrong, what is noble and ignoble, what is decent and indecent, this is not in the realm of the Amonite. We do not even study a book written by a non-Jew. This is our Torah! The Torah instructs us in these areas. No longer are we going to seek our Schiller to teach us about humanity. It no longer interests us.

The lessons of Kristallnacht — from one November 9th to the other — "Torah b'nemot al Yom kippur," Don’t believe there is wisdom among ancestors, to believe there is any other ethical culture for us besides the Torah.

I recall when I became bar mitzva. There was a large table upon which all the gifts were displayed (some people still do that!). I received a tallis with a mezuzah (a rarity in those days!). I got a set of mishnayot (beautiful!)... but, believe it or not, I got a set of Schiller, a set of Goethe, of Gilpatse, of Lessing, of Sarmes. I got all the classics! And so did all other bar mitzva boys back then.

Another lesson from the Kristallnacht: give the boys Tefilin! If they aren’t fluent in Hebrew, give them Art Scroll! If they can’t read lashon ha-kodesh give them translations! But classics? This is not done anymore.

Yes — a tremendous lesson. If gentiles develop an ethical cultural group good for them, they need it. For us it means nothing. It’s a thin veneer which does not penetrate. It fades away. The Nazis were also students of Schiller and Goethe. They studied ethics and humanism — and then they tortured and burnt and destroyed one-third of our people. These were the teachers of this empty humanistic culture. It has lost all meaning for us. Only the teachers of the people are entitled to teach us what is right and good and true and beautiful:

“כפי ה’ הוא חותם ואורכו יומנו.”

I am certain that the saintly Rabbi E.S. Hirsch will agree with my conclusion. In his comment on the above, he makes the following comment. A rabbi was chosen to head the Chosen Nation because he could be trusted to instruct his progeny:

“ישמרה דרכו ה’ עלשת תדרק וממשת.”

It does not say that they will keep the laws of the nation and, IN ADDITION they will ALSO do righteous deeds. The practice of righteous deeds is only to be defined through the law of the nation and ethics. But if it doesn’t grow from the field of learning, it withers and dies — it is worthless. Only through learning do we learn ethics — לعشת תדרק וממשת.

Even the most shining examples of greatness among the people are short-lived episodes. Their lessons are fleeting; they do not penetrate. Only that code of morals, that code, which derives from the Torah, can be taken seriously by Our People. It lasts for all eternity.
